N stood for nuptials Friday as a young couple got hitched on their favorite subway line.

In what was truly a moving ceremony, Hector Irakliotis, 26, and Tatyana Sandler, 25, exchanged vows on the N train as it crossed the Manhattan Bridge from Brooklyn.

"This is something new, something very different," she said laughing. "I think it's very cute! It's romantic. This is definitely a first. And look how cooperative everyone is! That says a lot."

The radiant bride, a film editor from Ukraine, boarded at 36th St. in a glamorous white gown and accompanied by her maid of honor.

She walked down the subway aisle — dodging poles — as the best man held up an iPhone blasting "City Love" by John Mayer.

The couple chose the N for their "I do's" because they spent a good deal of their courtship traveling on it.

"We've been through a lot. Good times, bad times, and a lot of the good times have taken place on the train," Irakliotis said. "Confessions of love, reconciliations, goofy, ridiculous conversations — the whole spectrum. In New York, you spend so much time on the train, we thought why not?"

An interfaith chaplain performed the ceremony as it went over the Manhattan Bridge. Riders broke into applause as they were pronounced man and wife. After posing for pictures, on subway stairs, the wedding party exited at Canal St. and headed for a bar.

Sandler, beaming with joy, said the unorthodox wedding venue was just another example of her new husband's incredible thoughtfulness.

"I'm originally from Ukraine, and each time we'd come back here, I'd say to Hector, 'It doesn't feel like home until I see the skyline as we're crossing the bridge.' And he remembered that. He planned it out specifically so that we'd see the skyline as we were married," she explained.
